Excerpt: . . . more work is done than is provided for in the course, in most cases less. The time-honored hallucination about Essays in Latin for juniors and seniors still appears for the amazement of the uninitiated, as well as the phrase Speeches 1 once each week, with its Delphic ambiguity, that has frightened many a prep. There are many things of this sort. Wouldnt it be well to advertise in plain terms our intellectual wares It is not a difficult matter to represent anything as excellent on paper, and hence these representations have little value to one who knows. A catalogue, to be sure, is the only available means of getting a college before the people; but an institution whose reputation is already established has no need of even the slightest misrepresentation. The class lists this year are unusually faulty. Several men who are in...
