Not illustrated. 1865 Excerpt: .read it off, and the clerks would take it down, if there was no objection. He would come to a return and read it off. He would speak of the objections, and very often referred to the law relative to those objections, and would read the law in some instances. He would then ask what was to be done with the return. There was generally a motion made by one of the judges, either to receive it or not count it. The attention of the president of the board was repeatedly called to sections twenty and twenty-seven, by members of the board. As one of the clerks, my knowledge is confined to the actions of the board. Question by Mr. M Conaughy.--Was it in contemplation, before the organization of the board of return judges, to have these, or any of these eight returns rejected, and had the attention of Henry J. Kuhn, the president, been called to the matter of their rejection? And if so, by whom, and tell us particularly all about it. Answer.--Witness protests against his examination as to matters occurring outside of the board, not connected with the official action of the board, and testifies under that protest. I think I met Mr. Kuhn on the morning of the last day of the meeting of the judges, on the street, and some conversation passed between us relative to some alleged difficulties about some of the returns. I cannot say that there was any such...
