Language: English Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Monograph of the British Aphides, Vol. 3 The illustrations of this and former volumes require a few words of comment. There are high authorities who may demur to the departure I have made from precedent as to the posing of my figures. It has been said that many fine plates of animals and plants have been rendered useless to science by the artistic rendering of a graceful attitude or an elegant curve - that the figure for science, again, should be representative or, to a certain extent, abstract. Biological illustrations certainly are not meant to please the eye alone. Yet no gain can be had by mere naked unclothed facts in drawing, and if all art is to be eliminated from science many will turn with disgust from that which by a better treatment would please. The natural pose of a bird or reptile can always be connected by an efficient artist with such scientific details as are capable of being rendered in the external form. Where the camera is employed this posing is inseparable from the representation of living insects; and after all, notwithstanding that the views are necessarily perspective, measurements may be made from them as reliably as from ordinary eye drawings.
