Excerpt: . . . 3 ENERGY SECTOR ORGANIZATION subministries and affiliated national corporations run the less centralized electric power and coal industries. The State Planning Commission has ultimate authority for energy project approval, budget allocations, and financing arrangements. The State Science and Technology Commission and the State Economic and Trade Commission are also involved with energy industry development. The China National Energy Investment Corporation oversees major investment loans for the energy sector. The China National Petroleum Corporation is responsible for all on-shore upstream oil and gas operations, including shallow-water areas. In the past few years, CNPC has begun transformation into a multi-national integrated oil company, establishing subsidiaries and acquiring overseas acreage and refineries in pursuit of export markets. The China National Offshore Oil Corporation was established in 1982 to explore Chinas offshore petroleum resources. The corporation has four regional subsidiaries (Bohai, East China Sea, Nanhai East, and Nanhai West) and several specialized subsidiaries. China established a third state oil company, the China National Star Petroleum, in January 1997. The company has been authorized by the central government to launch several exploration ventures with foreign companies. The China Petroleum and Chemical Corporation (Sinopec) is responsible for petroleum processing and product distribution; it controls production facilities for 90 percent of Chinas refined oil products and over 75 percent of its petrochemicals. The China National Chemicals Import and Export Corporation (Sinochem) is primarily involved in imports and exports of crude oil, petroleum products, and natural gas.
